REMARKS

25X1X

SOURCE: July 1947

1. The radio station near KOMUNARKA was located about 19 miles southwest of the town center of MOSCOW, about 4.3 miles west of a double-track RR line running south from MOSCOW. A branch line ran from this line to the installation (see Annex). The radio installation included a great many small masts; in the center of these there was a high mast connected by wires with the small masts. In the area of the radio installation there were three buildings, two of which were connected by special antennas with the main mast. The largest chicken farm of the KIISR was under construction by the side of the radio station.

2.  Comment:

confirmed the existence of a large radio station near KOMUNARKA, which was located east of a highway leading from MOSCOW in a southwesterly direction. He also confirmed the presence and location of the chicken farm and of the spur track, adding that the village of MIKOLO-KHOVANSKOYE (37°27'E/ 55°36'N) was located immediately west of the highway.
